40 Years of India-Bangladesh Relations (1971-2010): Ups and Downs

Dr. Vipran

Assistant Professor, Department of Political Science, Rakhiya Kanya Mahavidyalaya Shimla (H.P.), India

Abstract

In the phase of interdependence, no country can afford to live in isolation. Therefore, foreign policy becomes a crucial instrument to operationalise objectives of nation-states in the international arena. There are many trends which can be identified with the post-cold war scenario. The dominant trend is that of globalization. The world today is being referred to as 'global village'. The world is becoming a more integrated economic community than it was ever before, supported by the communication revolution. India and its neighbours have many things in common, particularly their political history. Bangladesh emerged on the world map as sovereign independent country in December 1971. India's role in the liberation of Bangladesh strengthened bilateral ties between the two nations. The study is an attempt to understand the relationship between India and Bangladesh from 1971 to 2010. This paper first provides a brief overview of India-Bangladesh relations followed by discussing the change in their relationship in detail.

Keywords: Relations, India-Bangladesh, International

Introduction

International Relations at all levels have been changing rapidly in the last quarter of 20th century. It is both an academic and public policy field, and can be either positivist or normative because it seeks to analyze as well as formulate foreign policy. It examines some of the critical issues of modern times such as the changing nature of international cooperation and conflicts, the new character of warfare, diplomacy, power politics, the impact of globalization upon states and societies, and persistence of world problems like poverty, migration, environment, trafficking in drugs, terrorism etc. The role of states and non-states actors in shaping world politics in new millennium is central to the study of international relations, as well as an understanding of how different vision of world order affect the prospects of peace and security.

A country's foreign policy is the product of its past history, which the country cannot change, its geography, which is normally very durable, its domestic circumstances and its international environment which is always in a flux and largely out of country's control. History and geography gives continuity to foreign policy and domestic and international circumstances produce undergoing dramatic transformation. The current change in the global as well as domestic milieu is the most crucial point in independent India's foreign policy. Year 1990 came as a turning point in foreign policy of India. In the early 1990's India's foreign policy confronted with the drastically changed domestic and external environment. At the domestic level it ushered the era of coalition politics which posed new challenges to the foreign policy makers of India.¹

Geographical Analysis of Work Participation in Himachal Pradesh: 1981-2011

¹Reenu Devi, ²Pankaj Aashish*, and ³Arvind Paul

Work participation is indispensable in understanding the development aspects of any region. The higher the proportion of workers in secondary and tertiary activities, the more developed is the society and vice-versa. In the present study, the emphasis is on the work participation rate of the people of Himachal Pradesh. An attempt has been made to comprehend the rural-urban and gender-wise differences in the work participation rate of Himachal Pradesh. The present study has utilized secondary data for the 1981, 1991, 2001, and 2011 census years. The data have been obtained from the Census of India and Primary Census Abstract. Graphs, Diagrams as well as Tables have been used to depict the variations in the work participation rate among both male and female workers. The study reveals that the work participation rate has remained considerably low, even though it has increased over the decades. However, the most noticeable issues have been the overwhelming growth of marginal workers to that of main workers and female workers to that of male workers.

Key Words: Work Participation, Main Workers, Marginal Workers

1. Introduction

The study of work participation occupies an important position in the field of Population Geography. The social and economic development of any region depends on the number of economically active persons and the quality and regularity of their work. The occupational structure of a country refers to the distribution of its population according to different occupations (Basu, 2009). The occupational structure is shaped by various factors such as the structure of the economy, the labour market, the industrial and resource base, status, and prestige (Patidar and Singh, 2010). The occupation depends upon the degree of economic development and sophistication of a country (Ghosh, 1985). The nature and complexity of the economic base give rise to a distinctive type of occupation characteristics (Kadam and Rathor, 2013). The occupational structure of a society is the product of several intimately related factors.

The Non-Aligned Geopolitical Code of India

¹Arvind Paul, ²Pankaj Anshish* and ¹Reenu Devi

Geopolitical code is defined as the operating code of a government's foreign policy that evaluates places beyond its boundaries. It is a set of strategic assumptions that a government makes about other states in forming its foreign policy. Such operational codes focus on the evaluation of places beyond the state's boundaries in terms of its strategic importance and potential threats. It is not just nation-centric but it is also formulated on the basis of a nation's view of the world. The Geopolitical Codes of India have operated on three levels: Local, Regional, and Global. With the world becoming multi-polar, the Non-Aligned Code of the Nehruvian legacy became redundant. Consistent threats and pressures from the smaller and larger neighbours have necessarily compelled India to re-shape its Geopolitical Codes.

Keywords: India, Foreign Policy, Foreign Relations, Non-Aligned Movement, Geopolitical Code, China, Pakistan.

1. Introduction

The geopolitical code is the framework by which a government's foreign policy examines regions outside of its borders. No country however large or powerful it might be, can afford to live in isolation and it formulates a set of strategic assumptions about other states. These operational codes entail assessing locations outside the state's borders in terms of their strategic significance and potential hazards. The local, regional, and global levels have all been affected by India's geopolitical codes. The local-level code studies the relationship of India with its neighbours mainly SAARC countries. The regional-level code is required for states that aspire to project their power beyond their immediate neighbours. All regional powers and potential regional powers need to have such codes. Regional codes will focus on India's relationship with the countries in the Asian Subcontinent. The governments of some nations will have global policies, and their governments will have appropriate worldwide Geopolitical Codes' (Taylor & Flint, 2000). Global Codes of India study the relations with the major powers of the world.

ISSUES AND CHALLENGES IN DEVELOPMENTAL SCHEMES IN TRIBAL AREAS OF HIMACHAL PRADESH

Abstract

The present study examines the prevalent issues and challenges in developmental schemes within tribal areas of Himachal Pradesh. Despite the implementation of various developmental schemes, the tribal areas continue to grapple with issues such as insufficient financial allocations, inefficient program execution and a disconnect between policies and ground-level realities. The socio-cultural diversity of tribal communities further complicates the effective implementation of development initiatives, necessitating culturally sensitive approaches. Additionally, geographical remoteness and challenging terrain pose logistical hurdles, hindering the seamless delivery of services and benefits to the tribal populace. The present study presents an analysis of different dimensions with regard to the evaluation of developmental schemes by using descriptive and inferential tools like mean, standard deviation, skewness, kurtosis, χ^2 test and p-value criterion. The developmental schemes have been evaluated by considering various aspects like satisfaction regarding type and amount of assistance provided under different developmental schemes, rating of various aspects of developmental schemes, role of different institutions in planning, implementation and monitoring of developmental schemes, various issues in developmental schemes and corrective actions proposed for effective implementation. In conclusion, the study emphasizes the pressing need for a comprehensive understanding of the intricate challenges for effective implementation faced by tribal people in Himachal Pradesh. The results of the study calls for innovative solutions, increased financial commitments and a holistic, community-centric approach to bridge the developmental gaps and uplift the socio-economic landscape of these marginalized regions.

Keywords: Developmental Schemes, Diversity, Financial Commitments, Geographical Remoteness, Tribal Populace.

1. Introduction

Rural development schemes are government initiatives designed to uplift and improve the quality of life in rural areas. These schemes aim to address various challenges faced by rural communities, including poverty, lack of infrastructure, inadequate access to education and healthcare, and limited economic opportunities. The overarching goal is to achieve holistic and sustainable development in rural regions. Governments often implement these schemes to bridge the rural-urban divide, promote inclusivity and ensure overall socio-economic progress. Many rural development schemes focus on creating employment opportunities in rural areas. It includes initiatives like implementation of Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Act, which guarantees a certain number of days of employment to rural households. Improving rural infrastructure is a crucial aspect of rural development. This involves building and upgrading roads, bridges, irrigation systems, electrification, and other essential facilities to enhance connectivity and overall living conditions. Schemes often target agricultural development and the enhancement of rural livelihoods. This may involve promoting sustainable agricultural practices, providing financial assistance to farmers and facilitating skill development for diverse rural occupations. Social welfare initiatives address the

India, being marked by its rich cultural diversity and a burgeoning population, has witnessed significant strides in economic growth over the past few decades. Amidst this growth, the Indian government has undertaken an array of developmental schemes aimed at addressing the socio-economic challenges that persist across the country. These initiatives, spanning diverse sectors such as education, healthcare, rural development, and poverty alleviation, underscore a commitment to fostering inclusive growth and improving the standard of living for its vast and varied population. The present study provides insights into the socio-economic impact of developmental schemes in tribal areas of Himachal Pradesh by considering various aspects of socio-economic development like personal economic growth, employment generation, infrastructure development, sectorial growth, economic prosperity, environmental development and social upliftment through various developmental schemes. The research aims to provide actionable insights to optimize the impact of developmental schemes, promoting sustainable and holistic development for the tribal populations in Himachal Pradesh by evaluating the effectiveness of various initiatives on the well-being of tribal communities in the region by employing surveys and interviews. The analysis of the collected responses has been performed by using mean, standard deviation, skewness, kurtosis, chi-square test and p-value criterion. Preliminary findings suggest that while some positive transformations have occurred, challenges also persist. These challenges include the need for more inclusive policies, enhanced infrastructure and targeted capacity-building programs.

Keywords: Cultural Diversity, Developmental Schemes, Economic Growth, Employment Generation, Economic Prosperity, Infrastructure Development, Sectorial Growth, Socio-economic Development.

1. Introduction

India, a nation marked by its rich cultural diversity and a burgeoning population, has witnessed significant strides in economic growth over the past few decades. Amidst this growth, the Indian government has undertaken an array of developmental schemes aimed at addressing the socio-economic challenges that persist across the country. These initiatives, spanning diverse sectors such as education, healthcare, rural development, and poverty alleviation, underscore a commitment to fostering inclusive growth and improving the standard of living for its vast and varied population. The socio-economic impact of these developmental schemes is of paramount importance in understanding India's progress on the path to comprehensive and sustainable development. As the world's second-most populous country, characterized by a complex tapestry of socio-economic disparities, India faces the intricate task of balancing economic growth with social inclusivity. This introduction will explore the multifaceted dimensions of the socio-economic impact of developmental schemes in India, examining their implications for poverty reduction, employment generation, healthcare outcomes, and educational advancements.

India's tryst with developmental schemes can be traced back to its post-independence era, where the government, in its pursuit of nation-building, initiated various policies to address pressing socio-economic issues. The Planning Commission, established in 1950, played a pivotal role in formulating and implementing Five-Year Plans that aimed at systematic economic development. The focus gradually shifted towards social sectors, giving

Esteemed Author

Please accept my heartiest felicitations on very kindly sending your valuable article/research paper titled 'THE EFFECT OF MOBILE PHONE ON THE GROWTH OF E-COMMERCE IN HIMACHAL PRADESH' for publication in Volume No. 13 (2023), Issue No. 07 (July).

Our editorial board has highly appreciated your invaluable piece of research. The researchers and the academics have conveyed their views and its worth have been appreciated by one and all.

With sincerest regards and profuse thanks for your contribution.

Sincerely Yours

Success has two roots merit & aggressiveness. In theory, merit suffices, but not in practice ... Neither merit nor aggressiveness alone avail. They must be mixed in the right proportion. The Secret of success in life is for a man to be ready for his opportunity when it comes.

ICT of Multinational Company Products and its Impact on Consumption Behavior in the Era of Globalization

Jyoti Shukla

Any development decision related to consumer products must be taken at the most micro-level while taking full account of the macro-level implications. This is captured succinctly in the aphorism "think globally, act locally". Today in the era of liberalization majority of consumers are consuming MNCPs and the urban household consumption behavior has been influenced by the products of MNCs. It was also noticed that consumers have less knowledge regarding the standards and codes used by the MNCPs. To explain the characteristics of MNCP products regarding its ICT level, it is important to determine Indian consumer attitudes towards MNCP's ICT level. Accordingly, the research was conducted. It was exploratory. The locale of the study was Hyderabad and Secunderabad. The total sample sizes of 300 were selected by using stratified random sampling techniques 100 each belonging to three income categories viz. HIG, MIG, and LIG. An interview schedule was designed for the collection of data from the respondents. For gathering information the following five scales were developed - Consumer product susceptibility and innovativeness Scale (CPSIS), The Consumer Ethnocentrism Scale (CES), The Goal Congruency Scale (GCS), Product Influence on Attitude Scale (PIAS), The Enculturation - Acculturation Scale (EAS). With the increase in Ethnocentrism level and product's influence, there was a decrease in the level of Enculturation - Acculturation. From the findings of the study, it can be firmly concluded that for the development of integrated consumer personality and to equip, empower, and enable the consumer with required information of MNCPs, consumer education related to the sustainability of products through multimedia is very much essential.

Keywords: Enculturation, Acculturation, Goal Congruency, Ethnocentrism, susceptibility, innovativeness, MNCP-Multinational company products, HIG-high Income Group, MIG - Middle Income Group, LIG - Low Income Group.

1. Introduction

Consumers receive information about products / Services from a very wide range of sources. When the consumer does have a plan to purchase, of course, their attention to such information is active & intense. This information, whether collected incidentally or with purpose, subsequently becomes the basis for either purchasing for oneself or influencing the decision of who might want to buy.

Abstract

"Punjab, often referred to as the 'Land of five rivers,' has been a significant player in shaping India's historical narrative, leaving an enduring mark on its trajectory. This imprint stems from the courageous and patriotic endeavours of the people of Punjab, who have etched out a distinctive place for themselves. A comprehensive study of its people becomes imperative to comprehend the nuanced dynamics of Punjab's history. This involves delving into their historical, cultural, and religious roots and understanding their political legacy. The year 1947 marked India's liberation from British rule, coinciding with a partition based on the two-nation theory. Punjab bore a heavy toll during this partition, experiencing substantial human and territorial losses. The partition's catastrophic aftermath overshadowed the jubilation of independence for Punjab. Post-partition, Punjab portrayed a sombre and bleak landscape, with the migration of refugees significantly altering the communal composition of the region. This migration upheaved the administrative, economic, and political structures, introducing many complex challenges. The division of Punjab along communal lines generated a palpable sense of indignation and frustration among the Sikh community. The expectations of establishing a Sikh State in independent India, fervently supported by Sikh, Congress, and Hindu leaders, remained unfulfilled. Perceiving an unequal

Abstract

Punjab, the "Land of five rivers", has played a major role in the history of India and had left a deep imprint on the course of Indian History. This imprint on Indian History is due to the people of Punjab, who through their courage and patriotism have carved out an important place for themselves. To understand the nature and dynamics of Punjab history in its true perspective, it is important to study the people of Punjab; their historical, cultural and religious background and their political heritage. In 1947, India got Independence from the British rule and at the same time it was partitioned on the on the basis of two nation theory. In this partition Punjab had to pay a heavy price both in term of human and territorial loss. The joy and achievement of independence for Punjab was marred by the holocaust of partition. After partition Punjab presented a very gloomy and downright dismal picture. Migration of refugees significantly altered the communal composition of Indian Punjab. It also shook the administrative, economic and political machinery of the province to its foundation and brought in its wake a host complicated problems. The division of Punjab on communal lines spread a sense of indignation and frustration among the Sikhs because the hopes of creating a Sikh State in Independent India rose by the Sikh leaders and supported by the congress and Hindu leaders had not been fulfilled. The Sikhs felt that they had been given a raw deal in the distribution of territory between the Hindus and the Muslims giving the expression to this feeling hence the demand for a Punjabi Suba was made and in its struggle for the achievement of Punjabi Suba, the Akali Dal

Tracing the Roots of Culture in Shimla Hills: Where Folklore and History Converge

Abstract

This paper aims to emphasize the pervasive belief in superhuman or supernatural forces within the study area, characterized by a wealth of myths, legends, traditions, and sacred events, each rooted in some form of mythology. The Shimla Hills, nestled in the Western Himalayas, are steeped in a tapestry of folk beliefs and legends closely entwined with deities, heroes, and cults. These traditions hold a significant sway over the customary practices and behaviors of the local populace. The region boasts a pantheon of revered deities originating from historical traditions. These divine figures, along with the accompanying folklore, serve as custodians of the traditional value system that governs the lives of the region's inhabitants.

The remarkable amalgamation of benevolent and malevolent spirits in the form of deities profoundly influences the social and religious culture of the local communities. Many of these deities have familial ties to various villages, fostering strong social and political bonds across the region. While this may project an image of monolithic culture, it is equally important to discern the sources and intricacies of cultural development by analyzing the conflicts and debates within the traditional framework.

These folk beliefs and supernatural traditions are a reflective mirror of the cultural life in this area, epitomizing an animistic essence.

Key Words: Cultural Convergence, Faith, Traditions, Sacred Ceremonies and Places, Supernatural Beliefs.

Shimla Hills: Where Culture and Spirituality Converge

In the heart of the Western Himalayas lies Shimla Hills, a region steeped in legendary traditions that go beyond mere cultural reflections. Here, religious beliefs, institutions, practices, and spiritual life form the very essence of everyday existence, serving as the foundation for the Success

has two roots
merit & aggressiveness.
In theory, merit suffices, but not in practice ...
Neither merit nor aggressiveness alone avail
They must be mixed in the right proportion.
The Secret of success in life is for a man to be ready for his opportunity
when it comes
